- Ogden, Nancy, Boyes, Mike and Moledina, Shayra (2003) Life Long Mental Health: A lifespan examination of developmental issues for health care providers. Created a manual and a website for the CHA that offered an overview of both normative and atypical development across the life span and identified areas where health care professional might need to be aware of opportunities to identify and provide assistance to children parents and elderly who may be experiencing challenges and difficulties. Referral resources (to local programs) were included.

Boyes, Mike (2001) CAPC Program Evaluation Toolkit: Tools and Strategies for Monitoring and Evaluating Programs Involving Children, Families and Communities. Toolkit and related workshops produced for Health Canada. This project involved running workshops with representatives from a broad range of social service organizations working with children and Families (with CAPC funding) and identifying both general and specific evaluation questions. The output from those workshops was then used to guide the development of the evaluation toolkit named above. Subsequent workshops assisted programs in identifying outcome (and pre-post) measures that addressed their program's outcomes as detailed in their logic models. A 1 year follow-up series of workshops helped then to see what had worked, what had not, and to make the adjustments necessary to move forward with their evaluation plans.

Boyes, Mike (late 1999 to present) Metis Calgary Family Services Medicine Wheel Early Learning Program implementation and initial outcome evaluation. This is an evaluation of a program intended to assist urban aboriginal preschoolers prepare to enter the school system. In addition to assisting the documentation of the program's implementation, I have also assisted in the selection and development of progress and outcome measures. Using the Early Development Instrument and the Home Observation for Measurement of the Environment scale we have been able to track the progress and success of the young Medicine Wheel attendees and show that there is a clear positive link between involvement in native culture and important academic outcomes such as literacy and academic focus.

Boyes, Mike (late 1999 to present) Aboriginal Student Program implementation and initial outcome evaluation. This project involves the ongoing evaluation of a program intended to assist urban aboriginal youth to stay in school and to do well in school. In addition to assisting the documentation of the program's implementation, I have also assisted in the selection and development of progress and outcome measures. We adapted two measures of ethnic identity and enculturation that I first put together for the Ke Mama Nnanik program, in the hopes that they will prove useful in this program setting as well. These measures have shown a consistent positive relationship between involvement in native culture and cultural activities and aboriginal student academic success.

Boyes, Mike (1999-2005) Healthy Families National Evaluation project. I worked with the Canadian Research Institute for Law and the Family (CRILF) on the evaluation of Healthy family early intervention projects in 5 sites across Canada (One in P.E.I., one in the Yukon, and three in Edmonton). My role in the projects was to consult on the design of the evaluation, the selection of the evaluation measures, and the training of the program home visitors who are actually collecting the evaluation information and administering the standardized measures. As well I designed a database system to assist CRILF in gathering and storing the standardized data and in quickly providing feedback to the program workers about each measure administration. This database now forms the base for the CANFIT on-line program data management system.

Boyes, Mike (1999) Design of an evaluation strategy for the Ke Mama Nnanik Family Day program (this was a CAPC funded program). This involved the gathering and/or creating or adapting of a package of assessment strategies to enable this program to monitor the outcomes of its participants. In the course of this project I also assisted the program to apply for provincial lottery funds for the purchase of a series of computers. They were successful in this application and also obtained the network hardware and software necessary to enable them to offer a computer literacy component to their programs as well as to enable the program to consider shifting to a database-supported information system for file management.
